Students and parents reawaken the University Park Campus and neighborhood as move-ins continue

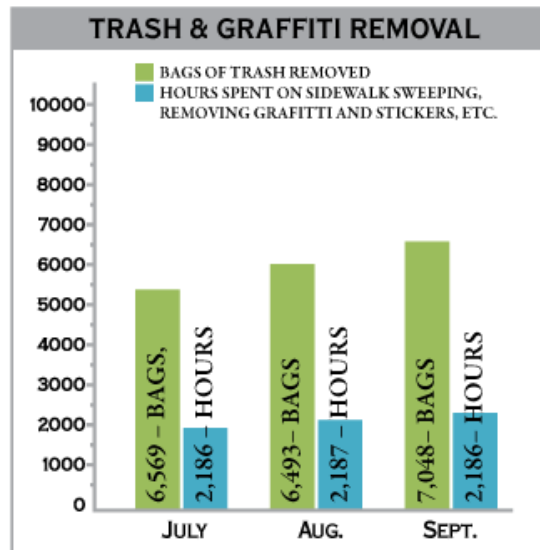

The campuses are officially open, and USC students — new and returning — are feeling the thrill of being back together and seeing one another face to face. This year, both first- and second-year students are exploring campus for the first time, and coming out from under 1.5 years of COVID-19 “safer at home” mandates has intensified the usual new student excitement.

To keep everyone safe, this fall’s move-in was staggered over five days. Numerous safety measures, from USC’s vaccination policy and daily Trojan Checks to mandatory masking and reduced capacity events, have been implemented for all students, faculty and staff. The thorough health and safety precautions, however, do little to temper students’ enthusiasm to be at USC in person.
